Local economic development strategies

Act locally to address global challenges and to manage the impact of global phenomena at local level (climate change adaptation, migration, the mediation of globalizing economic and cultural forces)

Governments can contribute to more effective and accountable international governance if we are ready to collaborate at the global table.

Local economic development from the bottom up to balanced systems of cities

Fiscal decentralization according to the principle of subsidiarity is required to meet these tasks.

Local government can contribute to sustainable urban development in five main ways:

- Local needs to target resources effectively, to foster participation and accountability.
- Fiscal decentralization according to the principle of subsidiarity is required to meet these tasks.
- Bringing together and balancing all sectors and interests in their communities. They can and should play a leadership role in developing and implementing a shared vision for the future.
- Act locally to address global challenges and to manage the impact of global phenomena at local level (climate change adaptation, migration, the mediation of globalizing economic and cultural forces).
- Governments can contribute to more effective and accountable international governance if we are ready to collaborate at the global table.
